Environmental Protection in the Amazon and the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in Brazil Convention on Human Rights (ACHR), because it is misinforming the public about the gravity of the res. [5] e organizations further expressed that the government must take immediate measures to protect the right to a healthy environment and to avoid aggression against human rights defenders; it must avoid the forced displacement of Indigenous communities, an obligation under Article 22 of the ACHR.

e State claimed that Brazilian environmental law is among the most advanced in the world and rebutted